Parental Authority for the Sacrament of Baptism

In matters of separation or divorce, the Family Law court of Australia considers that for a child to be recognised in any religion, the decision is to be made by the parent with parental responsibility. More often than not, the Court will provide for both parents to have equal shared parental responsibility. If there are no orders it is assumed both parents have shared responsibility. Therefore, the consent of both parents needs to be obtained in the absence of a specific Court order, for the child to be baptised.
